(AS A WELCOMING GIFT WITH A TRIAL YEAR OF 52 ISSUES)

The word is out that BUSINESS WEEK turned down 18,985 subscriptions last year ...

... or, to put it in more commercially dramatic terms, an income of $186,942.

Well, it's true. But the inference that we've gone soft in the head is grossly unfair. We've always followed the paradoxical policy of rejecting subscriptions from some folks while -- at the very same time -- soliciting them from others.

The reason is simply that BUSINESS WEEK is a special kind of magazine ... published for a special kind of reader. It is meant exclusively for management men who hold responsible positions in business and industry.

You'd think, wouldn't you, that housewives ... ferryboat captains ... basketball players ... barbers ... and affluent jockeys would understand the publication is not for them. But they keep sending orders anyway. We turn them down as gently as we can. But hell hath no fury like a reader scorned. And our circulation men have the scar tissue to show for it.

Under these painful circumstances, naturally we have a very warm place in our hearts for you men of business whose specific interests our entire publication is designed to serve.

So, as a bonus for joining our family of regular readers, we have compiled an extraordinary series of reports on major opportunities and problems confronting business today. These informative, thought-provoking studies, we feel certain will help any executive deal with the realities of our complex business world more effectively than ever before.

The new edition of our EXECUTIVE PORTFOLIO brings you 16 penetrating reports, all generously illustrated, on these timely subjects:

- | | |
|-------------------------------------|--------------------------------------|
| 1. Transportation: New Strategies | 3. $5-Billion World Computer Market |
| 2. Global Steel Battle Grows Hotter | 4. The Race for New Auto Markets |

5. Eastern Europe Breaks Its Bonds
6. Now to 1980: Amazing Growth Ahead
7. Business & Government Call Truce
8. Negroes Train for Bigger Jobs
9. Canada Booms, But Still Worries
10. Computers Changing Business

11. The EDP Revolution in Retailing
12. Packaging: Key to the Big Sell
13. How Management Consultants Help
14. How Market Research Pays Off
15. U. S. Business Goes World-Wide
16. Public Relations: What It Means

But executive reports are only one of a score of services in BW's big weekly issues. All these, with fact-packed captions for quick skimming, keep you primed on the whole swift-changing battlefield of business --

- | | | | |
|-----------------------|---------------|--------------|------------------|
| - Figures of the Week | - The Markets | - Management | - Transportation |
| - Business Outlook | - Finance | - Marketing | - Education |
| - Washington Outlook | - Companies | - Production | - Names & Faces |
| - Business Abroad | - Government | - Regions | - New Products |
| - Personal Business | - Labor | - Research | - Economics |

As separate "business services," the cost would be at least $200 to $300. Yet you get them all in one weekly magazine -- everything you need for long-sighted business planning -- at a nominal fee of only $8 per year. Not least, BUSINESS WEEK is colorful, human -- a treat to read.

Not only does BW save digging through newspapers, general news magazines and "services" -- BW turns reading from a chore into pure pleasure.

"Where have I been all this time?" writes a typical reader. "The world of inside business you open up for us week after week beats fiction forty ways from Sunday! Pays off in black ink profits, too."

Yes, the modest fee you invest in BUSINESS WEEK pays off in dollars -- more ways than you can realize until you read it from week to week as a subscriber.

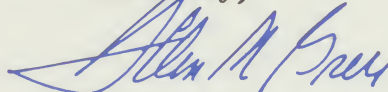

"Personal Business," for example. This service keeps feeding you invaluable tips on taxes, insurance, household financing -- on health, hobbies, vacations, retirement plans, cures for 57 varieties of personal headaches. Just another of many, many dividends BW has for you.

Today, as never before, advance knowledge of what's coming -- before it explodes in our faces -- is business and personal "life insurance."

BW's new EXECUTIVE PORTFOLIO comes to you as our Introductory Gift with the subscription you truly can't afford to be without.
